

ABSTRACT

A microelectronic device used to produce light radiation over a broad range of luminances, and capable of being used in particular to form improved pixels for screens or displays of the OLED type, for example.